Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE STATE CONSTITUTION.

Speaker Pinnell, who said:

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to introduce to you General T. M. Harris, who will address you upon the issues of the day.

has proved himself rather inclined to idleness and indolence, they will give to the best first-class farm hands six idlars a month, and then they grade it from that on down to nothing.—Well, now, just take that case, a first class farmer with a wife that class farmer working that class farmer with a wife that class farmer working the class farmer working that class farmer working the class farmer working the class farmer working the class farmer with a wife that class where will he find himself at the end of the year? Why he can hardly clothe himself, much less support a family. And it is easy to see his condition would be far worse than if he had been left a slaye, because then the master would have been bound to provide for him and his family. And in all the indications they give of a purpose in the treatment of these people they show that they do not practically and in fact accept the fact of the abolition of slavery; and concede that this man is a freeman, and entitled to all the loyal 'tights and to a protécless than three months after laying down their arms, we find, them urging the thing to get back into Congress. All you have got to do is to watch their papers and mingle among them as I have done, and you will find out the cause of their haste. It is this: They think if they can get back into Congress—they were very much in hope they would have got back this winter, because it would have been a glorious opportunity—if they can get back on the present basis of representation it will give them an advantage of three-fifths more delegates than the white population would entitle them to—thirty-three members more than they would be entitled to if the colored population were not counted. If they could get back with that advantage in political power to which they are not entitled, they would be able by combining with the copperhead definering and finesse, and if that did not quite enable them, by skilful engineering and finesse, and buying up a few scallawags of the republican party—for they could find enough directly, men who do not act from principle, but could be induced by appeals to their ambition—promises that they could control the policy of the nation—and they have even hoped to make the President of the United States a party to this plot, doing it under the pretence be amenable to that body and could be expelled. And if it should appear that he had committed treason and sworn he had not, he can be expelled. The whole thing is in the hands of Congress, with or without the oath; and it does not matter much about it, except that it is a ready and quick means of putting the thing to the test.

There is another amendment proposed, which is only a matter of policy and expediency—it has no effect particularly, one way or the other, between the two sections, and that is to remove that clause of the Constitution which prevents the laying of an export tax. This when investigated will prove to bring about something like this result, that it will enable us to collect off of these foreign countries that have been playing into the hands of the rebellion a revenue which would go a great ways towards paying the national debt. Tax all the cotton they take out of the country—tax everything that goes out—make them help pay this debt and it will have another good effect on the South. It will make it their interest to go to work and establish manufactories in their midst. It will do good to the South and therefore, I individually, am in favor of that amendment. But this is not a matter of such great consequence; the others I regard as indispensable.

I will now consider for a short time the proposed amendment of the Con-

Our Washington Leiler.

Address of Gen. T. M. Harris.

The Southern People Still Rebel-

New Guarantees of Union.

According to advertisement, General Harris delivered an address on Saturday evening, in the Hall of the House of Delegates, which was well filled with members of the Legislature and others. General Harris was introduced by General Harris spoke as follows: I have felt that I could almost venure to get up and address this assembly without a formal introduction, because, although I have not had the cleasure of a personal acquaintance with perhaps a majority of the audience, yet most of you have been known access the country and by your acts pleasure of a personal acquantance with perhaps a majority of the audience, yet most of you have been known to me by reputation and by your acts as loyal men ever since the first efforts of the people of West Virginia to restore government to the State, and during the progress of the new State in its short history up to this time. Most of you perhaps, many of you at least, have been known to me as public men who were taking a part in and directing the civil affairs of the State. This being my native State, although I was far away and engaged in an altogether different line of pursuit, I never lost the interest which I would naturally feel in the progress of civil affairs.

It therefore gives me great pleasure this evening to have the privilege of meeting you; and I shall attempt to address you on some of the prominent topics that are now engaging the attention of the people of our country, both State and National importance among those topics. Some of them are engaging the attention of the present Legislature of West Virginia, and these together with, others of the whole people of the State, In conversation the other day with an old gentleman, not a hundred miles from here, the question of the negro came up. The old man manifested a great deal of concern about the negro question, said that he thought that we were very much in the position of the man that had the

There is no chance for it at all, because although we cannot get indemnity for the past we must have security for the future. The Government in conferring its favor, its grace, its undeserved favor, has a right to do it in its own manner, in its own time, and in its own measure; and if it is wise it will not do it in such manner, at such time or in such measure as will put the existence of the Government itself in jeopardy.

Congress while he is a rebel; and the safety of the country requires that you let no man come into Congress who has ever committed the crime of treason. They tell you they cannot elect any body else because they have no loyal men. I tell you that is not so. They said the same thing in the county where I had my headquarters. They elected all their officers there and took pains to elect rebels, and elected them because they were robels, and their papers advocated their claims specially on the ground of the service they had rendered in the rebellion; and they would not notice anybody else or have anybody else to represent them, when to my knowledge there were in the town of Fredericksburg about sixty loyal men.

But cost what it may it is a This rebellion must be put cost more. But cost what the put' down, and you can never put it down by conferring political rights on rebels and puting them in places of power and places where they can injure and destroy the Government. This principle must be adhered to.

There are certain guarantees talked about that are proposed to be made—Constitutional amendments. One of them is to prevent any State from ever guarantee for self-protection. What will be the effect of it? Why some of these people that are very conciliatory and kind in their disposition say it will cause all of these people to go off and leave the State and depopulate it. I do not think it would have the effect of making them all go away, but there is a class it would drive from the State, and that is these agricults and its terms.
